

If the FCC grants the largest digital robber barons the ability to further their monopolies in local markets, it will be a history lesson for students on how the federal government is lax in its defense of the public good. It is totally against common sense to give these monopolies more power than they already have on manipulating news and programming.